

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

INTRODUCTION.

THE following work, compiled originally to meet the wants of the writer, is offered to the public, simply with the desire that it may afford assistance in the studies of those who desire to make known the unsearchable riches of Christ to the numerous and interesting people who speak the dialect for which it is prepared. It is designed to embrace most of the words in common use, arranged according to their sounds and tones, with brief definitions, and thus form a convenient manual dictionary sufficient for the common purposes of the student. A large Dictionary must, of course, be at hand for reference in difficult and important cases. But a complete Dictionary in each of the Chinese dialects cannot be expected. The most that can be sought is a complete Dictionary in the Court dialect, and a convenient vocabulary in each of the several dialects which claim the attention of missionaries; and the earlier such a Vocabulary can be prepared the greater will be the saving of time and labor. It is believed that at least one third of the time and labor of acquiring a good knowledge of such a dialect as the Tie Chiu, with only a large Dictionary in the Court dialect, might be saved by the help of such a Vocabulary.

2. The Orthography employed in this work is intended to correspond with that in most common use, except where the peculiarities of the dialect require a difference. It is briefly exhibited in the following table:—

SOUNDS OF THE VOWELS, &c.

- á as in far.
- a the same sound shortened and approaching u in but.
- à nearly as in man; intermediate between a in hat and in far.
- e as in they; before a consonant it is shortened.
- i „ „ machine; somewhat shortened before a consonant.
- o „ „ no; note.
- ó „ „ lord; north.
- u „ „ rule; put.
- ù „ „ turn.

w as woo in wood; or as ru; each letter being sounded short.

ai „ in aisle.

au „ ow in now.

iu „ ew in new.

oi „ in going.

“ small above the line represents the nasal sound.

“ „ „ „ „ the indistinct sound of u in but.

‘ the apostrophe denotes the aspirate sounds.

The third sound of a occurs in all those cases and those only in which it is preceded by i and followed by ng as li<sup>ng</sup>.

The sound of e in they and in men is usually regarded as the same in nature, differing only in length; it is not therefore marked in this work but is ascertained by its position.

The i shortened before a consonant is intermediate between its longest sound in machine and its shortest in pin, seldom becoming as short as in the latter.

The sound of o in not which has commonly been represented by the unmarked o never occurs in this dialect; the unmarked o is therefore used for the sound in note.

The termination ou, which has been employed by some, is not used in this work, as the sound which it represents does not seem to differ from the sound of o in no; if it has any u sound it is only the necessary turn of the voice in pronouncing the final o.

The i in iu has a more distinct sound than the e in new, and the u has the same sound as in muse.

The w retains both the consonant and vowel power. Its consonant power, however, is often very weak, sometimes scarcely perceptible.

Y is used in but few words, and even concerning these it may be doubtful whether i would not be equally proper. It may also be remarked that many of the words under the initial i are sometimes spoken as if they commenced with y, especially in rapid pronunciation; as yong like yong.

It is to be observed that no attempt is made to mark the length of the vowels, but only the nature of their sounds; their length will vary in the same word according to the tone; and therefore if the word is pronounced correctly according to its tone, the length of the vowel will of course be correct. Hence, except in the case of e and i mentioned in the table as shortened before consonants, the length of the vowels may be said to be governed by the tones. This may easily be seen by pronouncing such words as cham, che, kan, kiang, in each of the different tones.

The Tie Chiu dialect never exhibits the following initials, viz; a, d, f, r, v, x, and z; c, is used only in ch, and q is supplanted by k. The following terminations are never found; d b, d, f, g except in ng, h, j; r, s, v, x and x; c, g, w and y are not used as finals, their sounds being otherwise represented. With these exceptions all the vowel sounds exhibited in the table, and all the consonants with their usual English sounds are found both as initials and finals.

3. Eight varieties of TONE are marked in this work. This chief peculiarity is that the high and low, in the even going and entering are precisely the reverse of what they are called by the Chinese, and also of what they have usually been marked by writers on other dialects. Yet the least observation will show that what the Chinese call the low is, in this dialect, really the high, and what they call the high is really the low tone. This peculiarity is, however, less manifest in the reading than in the common sound of the words, which often differ only in tone; the reading being more conformable to the tone as designated by the Chinese, whether high or low. But as the following work is designed to exhibit the common rather than the reading sounds, the really high is distinguished by a straight mark over the tonal semicircle as in the following table:—

TONES.

	"	low	上平	Ch <sup>h</sup> ie p <sup>h</sup> e.
	HIGH	high	上聲	Siang si <sup>h</sup> a.
	GOING	high	下去	E kù
	"	medium	去聲	Ku si <sup>h</sup> a.
	"	low	上去	Ch <sup>h</sup> ie kù.
	ENTERING	high	下入	E jip.
	"	low	上入	Ch <sup>h</sup> ie jip.

The low EVEN, or ch<sup>h</sup>ie p<sup>h</sup>e, is strictly an even tone, being pronounced with a natural even voice and easy cadence at the close.

The high EVEN is usually found more difficult of utterance; the sound is high and somewhat prolonged, resembling a circumflex higher in the middle than at either end.

The peculiarity of the HIGH tone consists in a strong emphasis of the voice at the beginning of a word leaving the end to die away obscurely. Words in this tone are usually pronounced much shorter than in the even; but when followed by another word which is coupled to it and to be pronounced in connection with it, the sound is prolonged, rising, but not increasing in strength, to the close. In such cases it somewhat resembles the high Going.

The high GOING consists in a prolongation of sound continually rising to the end. The medium GOING comprises a class of words which the Tie Chiu men commonly read in an even tone, somewhat lower than the low EVEN. The low GOING tone consists in a prolongation of the sound, very low but increasing in strength or emphasis to the close.

The ENTERING tone consists in an abrupt ending, and the high and low differ in the same manner as the high and low EVEN. all words ending in k, p, or t are of this class, and these are the only consonants which form the termination; when the vowels form the termination, they are pronounced as if a consonant was about to be added but is suddenly cut off. It is sometimes represented by adding a final h; but as the abruptness results from the nature of the tone, if the tonal mark is used the h is not necessary. The use of h also interrupts the uniformity of the orthography, as words of this tone belong in the same class with others which do not end with h, and from which their sound differs only in tone. This may be seen by pronouncing such syllables as chi, ti, te, in each of the tones.

Though the preceding remarks may help to explain the nature of the tones in this dialect, yet the learner will need the assistance of a teacher with the living voice to enable him attain a perfectly correct use of them; and the earlier he learns to distinguish and pronounce them correctly the greater will be the saving of his future labor and the more accurate his use of the language.

4. We may here notice some varieties in the usage of persons who speak the Tie Chiu dialect.

Ch at the beginning of words is sometimes pronounced ts; and still more frequently intermediate between ch and ts.

The i in such words as sin, tit, is by some pronounced like e as sen, tet.

The termination ie is pronounced by many io, the o being somewhat short: as bie, bio; is io; chie chio.

The termination io is often pronounced iau: as lio, liau; mio, miau.

The oi in such words as ch<sup>oi</sup>, noi, t<sup>oi</sup>, o<sup>i</sup> is pronounced by many nearly like ai; as ch<sup>ai</sup>, nai, t<sup>ai</sup>, a<sup>i</sup>.

The initial l and n in such words as lam, lan; nam, nan are often interchanged; i.e. some persons will usually say lam lan, others usually nam, nan, without seeming to perceive any difference.

The terminations n, and ng, in such words as kuan, kwang; tien, tiang, are confounded by some who do not seem to notice any difference between them. Such persons will also usually confound the terminations et and ak, as siet, siak.

The u in such words as 汝, 去, lù, kù is sometimes pronounced u; as lu, ku. Also u in such words as 代, 塊, tù, kù is often pronounced ò; as tò, kò; and it may be remarked that when the u sound is given in this class of words it is a more open sound than when it occurs in the class just before mentioned; the difference is easily perceptible, but does not seem capable of being represented by Roman letters. The u in such words as ùn, ngùn is sometimes pronounced i; as in, ngin; by others it is pronounced e, and the n changed to ng; as eng, ngeng.

The nasal sounds are used much more by some persons than by others. The words in which it is universally used are mostly those which in the Court dialect and also in the Tie Chiu reading sound end in n or ng; these terminations, in common usage, are often dropped, and the nasal sound inserted before the preceding vowel, which is also often changed to suit the new form of the word; as Cheng, Ch<sup>e</sup>; Chiang, Ch<sup>ie</sup>; Chien, Ch<sup>ua</sup>; Hiong, H<sup>ia</sup>.

5. The Tie Chiu, like most other dialects, has what is called a reading and also a common sound to the words. The common sound, however, to a considerable extent accords with the reading. There are also a large number of words whose reading and common sounds are used interchangeably both in reading and in conversation.

But in other cases the reading sound is used only in chanting the classics. Neither teachers nor common readers, in reading a common book, ever think of using any other than the common sound; nor do hearers expect any other. Hence reading in the Tie Chiu dialect corresponds, more than in some other dialects, with reading in other languages. The hearer is expected to understand the words as they are read, and whatever explanations are made are rather of the thought than of the words. It is therefore the common sound of the words which it is important for missionaries to know; it is well to acquire a knowledge of the reading sounds in order to trace analogies and make comparisons; but for the purpose of making known the Gospel it is of but little use. Hence in the following work the words are arranged according to the common sound; and where words have several sounds, or tones with different meanings they are usually repeated under each respective sound or tone. In the second part or Index to the work, however, the reading sound will be found along with the common, where they differ from each other.

6. As the printing of this work has been performed under many disadvantages, it is presumed that severe criticism will be spared. If the work is capable of being, in the least degree, serviceable for the end designed let it be so used; and whatever can be done by any individual to render a future edition more useful will promote the great object of man's salvation. There will be different opinions among Chinese teachers as to the sound, and of course the collocation of many words. Instances have occurred in which four different teachers have given as many different sounds to a word; hence it would not be strange if some words should be arranged incorrectly. It is hoped however, that, as much care has been taken, with the assistance of several native teachers, it will be found essentially correct, and will lead those who follow it to such a use of the language as will cause them to be readily understood, and will render them extensively useful to the people.

AN INDEX

CONTAINING A TABLE OF THE RADICALS
AND A LIST OF THE WORDS IN THIS VOCABULARY
ARRANGED ACCORDING TO THE RADICALS.

In this Index the tones are not marked, except that the jip, when it ends with a vowel, is indicated by a breve over the final letter.

In the TABLE of RADICALS the name of the radical is first given and then the name by which it is usually designated by Tie Chiu men, when it differs from the former, is given in Italic except when prevented by want of room. C. annexed to a Radical indicates that it is used only in composition with other characters; when prefixed to a secondary form of a Radical it indicates that that form is only so used.

In the LIST OF WORDS, the common sound, or that under which it is arranged in the Vocabulary, is first given, and then the Reading sound when it differs from the common, is given in Italic. The words under each Radical are arranged according to the number of strokes, but where there are only few words under a Radical the number of strokes is not indicated, as the eye will at once rest on the word sought without the trouble of counting. The list is believed to contain all the words in common use, and may therefore serve as a guide in the preparation of Chinese type, or of Vocabularies in other dialects.
